

Topic: Social Sciences and Humanities in a Post-Crisis Period

Place: Online Research

This program is designed to advance the academic and professional careers of Ph.D. holders through collaboration with experienced research advisers and participation in multidisciplinary and international research groups together with other post-doctoral fellows.

The program is fully online.

The language of the program is English and Spanish.

Every selected fellow will deal with a specific societal challenge through attending lectures, courses, and scientific conferences while leaving time for guided research. In times full of challenges with the post-COVID-19 pandemic, the world, more than ever, needs further academic advancement. The selected fellows will work on selected topics in the area of social sciences and humanities (Pedagogy, economics, education, law, sociology, philosophy, psychology, history, geography, political science, health care, tourism, music, anthropology, and related fields and their subdomains).

Academic Domains:

Pedagogy, economics, education, law, sociology, philosophy, psychology, history, geography, political science, health care, tourism, music, anthropology, and related fields and their subdomains...

ESI Annual Conference

Each year, the program hosts one major conference. The first two conferences were organized at the University of La Laguna, Spain. The focus of this conference is on virtual or in-person meetings with the other ESI fellows and presentations of the research activities in front of a wider audience.

Certificates

A certificate for successful completion of the ESI postdoctoral training “Social Sciences and Humanities in a Post-Crisis Period” will be awarded to the candidate after the completion of all 3 parts of the program.

The certificate will be issued by the European Scientific Institute.

– Additional documents, which describe the concrete academic activities of the candidate will be issued.